Why Study Integrated Humanities?

Human values and beliefs are often reflected through various forms of expression, such as literature, philosophy, and the arts. The study of humanities allows exploration of the various modes/forms of human expression in the Western as well as non-Western cultures. Our goal is to develop critical and analytical thinking about human civilization through a close examination of its histories, music, painting, sculpture, architecture, philosophy, literature, and other art forms such as the theatre and cinema.

Career Options

The major will provide a rigorous pre-professional degree to prepare students for graduate school in law, business and public administration, diplomacy, public relations, journalism, development, as well as academic programs such as anthropology, humanities, communication studies, media studies, American studies, ethnic studies, area studies, and other interdisciplinary programs.
